

Good Jobs First: Research Analyst, Washington, DC

Good Jobs First is a non-profit, non-partisan resource center promoting corporate and government accountability in economic development and smart growth for working families.

We now seek a Washington, DC research analyst to perform research and writing on economic development subsidies, smart growth and corporate accountability. The job will also involve work on the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009 (the $787 billion federal stimulus bill).

Applicants must have:

- demonstrated commitment to social and economic justice
- an undergraduate college degree, preferably with course concentrations in areas such as public finance, economic development, public policy, energy policy, planning/land use, economics, business, environmental studies or journalism
- strong writing and interviewing skills
- strong analytical skills to handle diverse sources and concepts
- basic computer software skills: word processing, spreadsheets, internet

Other desirable qualifications:

- graduate degree and/or equivalent professional experience in public finance, economic development, public policy, energy policy, planning/land use, economics, business, environmental studies or journalism
- familiarity with constituency-based justice networks such as community organizing/community reinvestment, organized labor, tax and budget fairness, environmentalism or environmental justice, and/or smart growth movements
- website-design, database management or GIS software experience

This is an opportunity for rewarding and published work in a fast-paced teamwork environment at a highly productive resource center.

Compensation is commensurate with experience and includes healthcare, retirement contributions, and generous vacation. Women and people of color are encouraged to apply.

Applicants are urged to review our website to learn more about our work and our networks.
